XX. The Hausers

[pg. 135-36]

The headquarters of the Glarner Hausers is Näfels, as is generally known today, and has been for a long time. According to the 1876 cantonal tax rolls, of the 112 Hausers, 71 of them were in Näfels, 18 in Glarus, 17 in Elm, 2 each in Schwanden and Niederurnen, and 1 each in Nidfurn and Mollis. And 113 years before, they were also represented in the capital city of Glarus, but only by a single head-taxpayer and tax authorizer, while they were reported on in Näfels, in the 1763 cantonal tax rolls, with 30 head-taxpayers and a property of 47,600 Fl. In Näfels resided also the 7 Hausers who, in 1739-1833, were chosen by the Catholic Landsgemeinde^a as cantonal presidents of Canton Glarus:

Joseph Fridolin Hauser, 1739-41.

Kaspar Hauser, 1744-46.

Fridolin Joseph Hauser, 1749-51 and 1754-56.

Balthasar Joseph Hauser, 1774-76 and 1784-86.

Kaspar Joseph Hauser, 1794-96.

Anton Joseph Hauser, 1806-08 and 1811-13.

Fridolin Joseph Hauser, 1826-28 and 1831-33.

On the other hand, the Hausers from Elm are not directly related to the Hausers from Näfels, as I thought. According to the list of former "non-cantonal citizens" accepted into the Glarner cantonal rights in 1834, the Hausers from Elm¹ also belonged to this category of cantonal residents. However, that rules out that the Hausers from Elm, those of the Evangelical faith, had wished to move away from Näfels and had emigrated to Elm at the time of the Reformation, or in the following decade after 1531 [when the Evangelicals were defeated by the Catholics at the Battle of Kappel], as I had earlier assumed. For they would not have lost their Glarner cantonal rights thru their emigration to Elm, but, at most, their citizen rights from Näfels. However, the Elm communal authorities also had no more to say about where the Elmer Hausers came from, even in 1833, and likewise infrequently do I find some sort of hint in the Elm church register. As it is generally known, the Hausers are found in various Swiss cantons, in Zürich (Confederation Counsellor Hauser from Wädenswil), in St. Gallen (Government Counsellor Hauser), in Basel, etc.

The first mention of the Hausers in Elm is found in 1602. Pastor Goldbach reported: "On the second of December of the year 1602 was baptized Christen Hauser, legitimate son of Sebastian Husser and Maria Danow. His godparents were Hans Elmer, son of the same Michel, and Hans Ulrich Elmer, Phäma (Euphemia) Schnider, and Barbara Schnider." The same Sebastian, or Baschion or Baschli, Huser had 7 other sons baptized in 1603-16; and, in the same time, Caspar Huser, married to Verena Furer, had registered 5 children for baptism, among them a son, Baschli, which gives rise to the suspicion that Caspar and Sebastian Hauser were brothers.

^a The Popular Assembly, which is the Glarus cantonal legislative body. It is made up of all the citizens of the communes who have full citizenship rights. [SW]
